Paul is a retired business development executive with experience in engineering, marketing and global business development. As a senior executive with LSI Industries for more than seventeen years, he spearheaded an initiative to integrate product engineering and product management into one cohesive unit. He also developed all the product and technology training materials for LED products. Paul's skills include strategic planning, business analysis, organizational design and development, product design and marketing, and training.

Paul's volunteer activities include participating in the Spokane Cancer Society's longest day of golf fundraising tourney and Habitat for Humanity.

OneSource Experience

As a new volunteer, Paul looks forward to putting his business planning and product marketing skills to good use. He is particularly interested in youth, education, animal welfare, and community development projects.
