Michelle specializes in improving the workplace experiences and leadership skills of clinicians, research scientists, and other professionals working to advance human health. For more than a decade, she's been catalyzing employee engagement and improving communication within values-driven medical and life science organizations.

Michelle is currently the senior advisor for employee experience strategy for OhioHealth. In this role, she leads teams to apply Human-Centered Design and Agile project management methodologies to identify and prioritize opportunities and co-create, test, and deploy solutions. As part of OhioHealth's Culture, Engagement and Inclusion team, Michelle also contributes to a range of initiatives related to diversity and inclusion, rewards and recognition, organizational values, and talent brand/employee value proposition.

Michelle's previous roles at OhioHealth include HR Business Partner Director, Sr. Advisor to the CHRO, and Director of HR Change Initiatives. She has also led communications and employee engagement efforts for a health system in Northern Virginia (Inova) and for the nation's largest private biomedical research institute (the Howard Hughes Medical Institute). Before finding her sweet spot in medical and life sciences, Michelle worked as a journalist, and in training and communications in the manufacturing sector.

OneSource Experience

As a OneSource volunteer, Michelle looks forward to working on leadership development training, as well as coaching.
